A letter from the publisher

Dear Members,

Welcome back to Texas! I know many of you have enjoyed horse showing elsewhere this Summer. Lucky you to get out of the heat! Summers in Traverse City are the best!

We've got a few great shows left to the 2021 Show Year. The all new THJA Medals are coming up soon. Points were tabulated from 12/2/20 through 8/15/21. Check your Equitation points to see if you've qualified!

In this issue, you'll see various scholarship applications. These are on our web site, but I thought I would include these to make it easy. If you're going to any of the big indoor shows and need a little help, apply! We want to help you and your horse reach your goals.

As we hit the final stretch for the 2021 Show Year, check your points! Don't forget to renew your membership and make any changes to your horse registrations. There's a form for just about everything you need (that's THJA related) under the FORMS tab on our web site.

Wishing you the best... as always,

Kindly,
Suzanne Warmack, Editor & Publisher

PEMF

Equine Bodywork Series

Amber Dawn, Adept Equine, LLC

"What are they doing over there?" I asked a trainer pointing towards a horse with hoses laid across their back. The horse was yawning while the machine ticked rhythmically.

"They are pulsing it"

"Ok but what does that do?"

The trainer shrugged back "I'm not sure exactly how it works. It helps the horse recover faster. I used it on my ankle once and it felt so much better. It was like magic."

And so started my research into PEMF for Equine Bodywork.

PEMF stands for Pulsed ElectroMagnetic Field. A quick internet search reveals PEMF was FDA approved for human use in 1979. Since then they have been reclassified as Class 2 wellness devices and FDA approved for uses such as: healing of nonunion fractures, urinary incontinence, muscle stimulation, depression & anxiety, and brain cancer. PEMF first made its way into the equine industry via race tracks. Race horse trainers were looking for holistic ways to help their horses recover from the rigors of training and give them a competitive edge. Since then PEMF has been used for many things in the horse world as it may increase circulation, reduce inflammation and improve overall wellness thus helping the horse heal itself. People pulse their horses for reasons varying from relaxation and exercise recovery to helping find and heal injury.

PEMF is often referred to as cellular exercise and healing at a cellular level. It is believed to work on the Nitric Oxide pathways in the body with the important function vasodilation and increasing circulation. By working with the body at a cellular level and increasing cell performance, the body is then capable of performing its best and healing itself. It's believed that PEMF helps improve the electric potential of our cells restoring them to their correct electrical state. We are electrical beings and use energy to send signals throughout our body every moment of our life. This has led some people to begin calling PEMF 'recharging the cells'.

I'll admit that PEMF sounded like magical nonsense to me. However skeptical, I believe we do not always understand how something works and that humans have lots left to discover about biomechanics and body function. I've seen magic like results from massage, fascia release, acupuncture, chiropractic and other holistic practices. It was time for me to be the test dummy and see if I would find any personal benefit from PEMF. I called several of the main PEMF equipment suppliers for demos and trials. After several individual company pitches, I decided to try Pulse Equine and Magna Wave equipment.

The knowledgeable sales representative arrived and set up the human equipment. She had me take a seat in the PEMF chair for a full body session and then explained we would focus on a problem area afterwards. I could hear the machine clicking as we began. Interestingly I only felt the pulsing in my left shoulder and lower back. The rep explained you typically only feel the pulsing where your body needs it most. My entire left arm pulsed with muscle contractions as I sat. I explained to her that I had a 15 year old torn rotator cuff caused from an involuntary dismount.

She placed the human paddles on my left shoulder. One paddle was placed behind me on my shoulder blade and the other paddle was placed similarly but on the front of my chest. She turned up the PEMF machine and it was the strangest sensation. I felt the pulsing between the two magnetic paddles inside my shoulder! I felt it exactly where I so often felt pain that prevented me from sleeping or lifting my arm all the way up. I felt like scratching an itch that I had never been able to reach. I pulsed the specific area for 15 minutes.

By the time the rep packed up and left, my shoulder felt different. A little more range of motion perhaps and less grinding when I moved my arm in circles. I wondered if the machine worked or if I was having a placebo effect. The next morning I woke up laying on my left side for the first time in 15 years. I called the sales representative that morning and purchased the equipment. My personal results lasted about 2 weeks after that session. I now pulse my shoulder 1-2 times a month and am pain free with better range of motion.

Since then I have seen PEMF help draw out hoof abscess, ease stiffness and help a hock recover after being kicked by another horse, relax tension of the Poll and TJM, and relax muscles that started creating a hunter's bump. As with any equine bodywork, PEMF is intended for use on well animals. Diagnosis and treatment of injury must be performed by a veterinarian. If your veterinarian feels PEMF can help your injured athlete they create a plan for the PEMF practitioner to follow.

PEMF has shown great results assisting with exercise recovery & relaxation at shows and can be used in short sessions to assist with muscle warm up and relaxation prior performing. I like to combine PEMF with massage to assist with fascia release and longer term results.

If you feel like PEMF may benefit you or your horse, Pulse Equine and Magna Waves individual websites list their certified practitioners. Your vet, trainer or other horse owners are an invaluable resources for personal experience and references as well. Like massage, chiropractic, acupuncture and other alternative modalities sometimes trying it for yourself is the best way to determine its usefulness for your equine athlete.
